The Kokopelli are part of a huge pantheon of deities from the Hopi belief system which represent the spirits, known as the Katsina. (Yes, you read that correctly: the correct pronunciation is Katsina, not Kachina. More on that later). The Hopi believe that everything has a spirit, and the Katsina are a visible form of those spirits.

Any Hopi katsina is a one-of-a-kind hand-made item. There are three steps to making a katsina doll—one is carving it, the second is painting it, and the third is applying the feathers. The feathers sometimes are underestimated in terms of their importance, but they are a part of the whole appearance.
