The Argus C3 was a low-priced rangefinder camera mass-produced from 1939 to 1966 by Argus in Ann Arbor, Michigan, United States. The camera sold about 2 million units, making it one of the most popular cameras in history. Due to its shape, size, and weight, it is commonly referred to as "The Brick" by photographers (in Japan its nickname translates as "The Lunchbox").

Argus C3 - Wikipedia

The Argus C-3 has a very distinctive shape, and is called 'the brick' and 'the lunchbox' depending on where you live. Here is the owner's manual, Tiffen brand aftermarket hood, and adapter. The small filter in the white case is a 'Walz' brand #101, and fits directly to the lens, no adapter needed.

The C3 is more versatile than you would think at first glance; the lenses are actually interchangeable and you could realistically build a kit around the Brick. A manual I have outlines the use of a telephoto lens (100mm), wide angle lens (35mm), and the Argus Variable Power Viewfinder, which views in 35mm, 50mm, and 100mm with built-in parallax adjustment.

The Argus C3 could rightly be regarded as nothing more than a box with a lens attached to it. Indeed, the C3 was colloquially referred to as the 'Lunchbox' in Japan (and 'The Brick' in the United States). But to flippantly call the C3 simple would be a bit lax. The camera's actually something of a paradox.

The two-tone leatherette C3 Match-Matic was produced between 1958 and 1966, and its retro styling still appeals to many collectors' eyes today. But beneath the skin, the Match-Matic is largely the same old Argus "brick" sold since 1938 (and discussed further in the Argus C3 article.). The cosmetic makeover may have been influenced by 1950s automobile styling from Detroit, a near neighbor to the ...

The Argus C3 camera was the first 35mm camera I ever had. My father gave me his camera when I was about 10 years old and I used it for many years, including honors photography courses in Chicago.
