India Black in the City of Light: Another fun (short) episode in the Madam of Espionage series. India is yet again a humorous narrator and madam-turned-spy with a knack of getting into trouble (a stinking mess to be more precise) and French returns as the gallant secret agent who also has a knack of getting into trouble!

India Black in the City of Light by Carol K. Carr

India Black, that feisty and very unusual heroine, has gotten used to going out as a spy to assist the British government agent. French. French had also liked being around India and would often pass by her establishment, where she was a Madame for the upper classes of mid 19th century British society.

India Black, brothel madam-cum-British spy is on to her third adventure, after India Black (A Madam of Espionage Mystery) and India Black and the Widow of Windsor (A Madam of Espionage Mystery). (A nice little extra novella, India Black and the Rajah's Ruby (A MADAM OF ESPIONAGE MYSTERY) , is also available and gives readers the background on how India came to be the owner of her very own brothel.)

I'm a bit ambivalent about heroine India Black. She's snarky and a bit amoral but you can't help liking and admiring her anyway. This little novella, a fun read, is a prequel to the first two India novels set in Victorian England, India Black (A Madam of Espionage Mystery) and India Black and the Widow of Windsor (A Madam of Espionage Mystery). In those novels india is already established as madam of her very own brothel, after having worked a few years in another madam's establishment.

Review: India Black

When it comes to undercover work, nobody does it better than Madam of Espionage India Black... India and the handsome British spy, French, are ordered to escort a Russian agent to Paris where he will be exchanged for one of Her Majesty's operatives. The task seems straightforward and India looks forward to enjoying the delights of the city—and the delights of French.
