Language Maintenance And Shift In

Language maintenance denotes the continuing use of a language in the face of competition from a regionally and socially more powerful language. Language shift is the opposite of this: it denotes the replacement of one language by another as the primary means of communication within a community. The term language death is used when that community is the last one in the world to use that language. The extinction of Cornish in England is an example of language death as well as shift (to English).

Conscious efforts centered around various attempts to reverse the shift and retain or regain the structural and functional integrity of a threatened language fall within the social dynamic that is called language maintenance. Shift and maintenance are two poles in a complex dialectic since any social or intellectual movement voicing an advocacy for maintenance would be meaningless without the existence of historical contingencies that threaten to push languages in the direction of shift.

Language Shift. If language maintenance does not occur, there can be several results. One is language death; speakers become bilingual, younger speakers become dominant in another language, and the language is said to die. The speakers or the community does not die, of course, they just become a subset of speakers of another language.
