The subject of Aristotle's On the Heavens, Books 3-4, is the four elements of earth, air, fire and water, which exist below the heavens. Book 3, in chapters 1 to 7, frequently criticizes the Presocratic philosophers. Because of this, Simplicius' commentary is one of our main sources of quotations of the Presocratics.

From very early on, Aristotle's scheme of categories was disputed. Xenocrates, the third head of Plato's school, said that all we need is what exists in itself and what is relative . These two categories had been enough for Plato and they should be enough fo r us. We are told this by Simplicius On the Categories 63.22-3. For each category there was someone at some ...

There has recently been considerable renewed interest in Book 7 of the Physics of Aristotle, once regarded as merely an undeveloped forerunner to Book 8. The debate surrounding the importance of the text is not new to modern scholarship: for example, in the fourth century BC Eudemos, the Peripatetic philosopher associate of Aristotle, left it out of his treatment of the Physics.
