Situation Ethics: The New Morality by Joseph F. Fletcher

Situation ethics was developed by American Anglican theologian Joseph F. Fletcher, whose book Situation Ethics: The New Morality (1966) arose from his objections to both moral absolutism (the view that there are fixed universal moral principles that have binding authority in all circumstances) and moral relativism (the view that there are no fixed moral principles at all).

Situation ethics cannot legitimately claim that love replaces law in the Scripture, for the two go hand in hand. The new morality's popularity is enhanced by its refusal to admit to any law except love. It has been used to condone adultery, abortion, homosexuality, theft, drunkenness, and drug usage. One can rationalize much deviant behavior in the name of love, but without Biblical guidelines, he has no way of knowing whether what he is doing is loving!

Situational ethics or situation ethics takes into account the particular context of an act when evaluating it ethically, rather than judging it according to absolute moral standards. With the intent to have a fair basis for judgments or action, one looks to personal ideals of what is appropriate to guide them, rather than an unchanging universal code of conduct, such as Biblical law under divine command theory or the Kantian categorical imperative. Proponents of situational approaches to ethics
