Igor Stravinsky 's 1910 ballet The Firebird is best known in its full orchestral version, and it is also quite familiar in the concert suites he extracted from it. Virtually unknown is the piano reduction Stravinsky made for rehearsal purposes. Even though there have been attempts to shape some of the ballet into a suite for solo piano, usually drawing on the music from the Danse infernale, the Berceuse, and the Finale, the full work has rarely been played on piano.

It takes its place in a lineage stretching from Glinka to Scriabin, making it an amalgam of Russian music past and present.
