This second book in the godspeaker trilogy captured my attention more than the first. We have crossed the desert from Maijak to Ethrea, and met princess Rhian. Rhian's father and brothers have died leaving no heir. The advisors of the kingdom fight to marry Rhian to a prince of their own choosing but she has different ideas. Rhian wants to be Queen.

Godspeaker Trilogy by Karen Miller - goodreads.com

This book is a trilogy wrapped up in one pretty little (and very long) package. The books are Empress, The Riven Kingdom and Hammer of God. I have a lot of thoughts about this series so bare with me here while I try to make it somewhat comprehensible. I've written a review about Empress here about my love for Hekat, the protagonist of that book.

And we arrive now at the final instalment of my reviews of the Godspeaker trilogy. Picking up soon after the end of The Riven Kingdom, Hammer of God is the epic battle between Mijak and Ethrea, between Hekat and Dmitrak (for Mijak) and Zandakar and Rhian (for Ethrea). Portents, prophecies, faith, and family are all important parts of this book, as
