Opinion | The Stories We Tell Ourselves - The New York Times

The stories we tell ourselves matter. And the stories we allow others to tell us about ourselves matter as well. Too often, as adults we miss this fact. Or we get so used to the same stories over and over again, we forget that we get to write our own. Somewhere along the way we adopted the story as truth.

The Stories We Tell Ourselves - Becoming Minimalist

We go back and forth depending on the context, and on the stories we tell ourselves. So how do we ensure we tell ourselves a helpful story that pushes us to overcome setbacks? If, as I mentioned in my previous post, fear is to be accepted and appreciated, stories need to be debunked. Don't label others, and certainly don't label yourself.

Mastering The Stories We Tell Ourselves - ARDENT CENTER

The stories we tell ourselves. October 8, 2018 By drlimerence 14 Comments. In the previous post, I talked about reverie, and how limerents tend to rehearse scenes in their minds as a way of feeling connected to LO and trying to prepare for future meetings. Another aspect of reverie that I didn't touch on is the fact that we often rehearse imagined scenes to help ourselves make sense of what is happening to us.
